Urban and Regional Studies is an interdisciplinary program that provides a foundation in urban geography, economic and political systems, and social issues. The Urban and Regional Studies major entails the study of America's cities, metropolitan areas, and their populations. Students learn about the cultural, political, and historical aspects of urban living and the influence of these factors on the growth and decline of businesses and neighborhoods.

Our graduates work in the public, private, and nonprofit sectors in governmental agencies, health care facilities, and environmental advocacy organizations. In addition to professional careers, this degree prepares students for law school and graduate study.

Accelerated 4+1 program available (BA + Master of Public Administration).
